

Can these, or such, be any aids to us?
Look they as they were built to shake the world,
 Or be a moment to our enterprise? Benj. Johnson.
 Though I cannot tell what a man says; if he will be sincere, I may easily know what he looks. Collier.
 It will be his lot to look singular in loose and licentious times, and to become a by-word. Atterbury's Sermons.
 10. To form the air in any particular manner, in regarding or beholding.
 I welcome the condition of the time,
 Which cannot look more hideously on me,
 Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakef. Henry IV.
 That which was the worst now least afflicts me:
 Blindness, for had I fight, confus'd with shame,
 How could I once look up, or heave the head. Milton.
 These look up to you with reverence, and would be animated by the sight of him at whose soul they have taken fire in his writings. Swift to Pope.
 11. To look about one. To be alarmed; to be vigilant.
 It will import those men who dwell careless to look about them; to enter into serious consultation, how they may avert that ruin. Decoy of Piety.
 If you find a wasting of your flesh, then look about you, especially if it troubled with a cough. Harvey on Consumptions.
 John's cause was a good milch cow, and many a man fulfilled his family out of it: however, John began to think it high time to look about him. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
 12. To look after. To attend; to take care of; to observe with care, anxiety, or tenderness.
 Mens hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. Luke xxi. 26.
 Politeness of manners, and knowledge of the world, should principally be looked after in a tutor. Locke on Education.
 A mother was wont to indulge her daughters, when any of them desired dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must be sure to look diligently after them, that they were not ill managed. Locke on Education.
 My subject does not oblige me to look after the water, or point forth the place whereunto it is now retreated. Woodw.
 13. To look for. To expect.
 Phalaris's disgrace was enervated, in lieu of comfort, of Artelia, who telling him he never looked for other, bad him seek some other mistress. Sidney.
 Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker, b. v.
 Thou
 Shalt feel our justice, in whose earliest passage
Look for no less than death. Shakef. Winter's Tale.
 If we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment. Heb. x.
 In dealing with cunning persons, it is good to say little to them, and that which they least look for. Bacon's Essays.
 This mistake was not such as they looked for; and, though the error in form seemed to be consented to, yet the substance of the accusation might be still insisted on. Clarendon.
 Inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples in confession, instead of setting you free, which is the benefit to be looked for by confession, perplex you the more. Taylor.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
 The bait of homed words. Milton.
 Drown'd in deep despair,
 He dares not offer one repenting prayer:
 Amaz'd he lies, and sadly looks for death. Dryden's Juv.
 I must with patience all the terms attend,
 Till mine is call'd; and that long look'd for day
 Is still encumber'd with some new delay. Dryden's Juv.
 This limitation of Adam's empire to his line, will save those the labour who would look for one heir amongst the race of brutes, but will very little contribute to the discovery of one amongst men. Locke.
 14. To look into. To examine; to sift; to inspect closely; to observe narrowly.
 His nephew's levies to him appear'd
 To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack;
 But better look'd into, he truly found
 It was against your highness. Shakef. Hamlet.
 The more frequently and narrowly we look into the works of nature, the more occasion we shall have to admire their beauty. Atterbury's Sermons.
 It is very well worth a traveller's while to look into all that lies in his way. Addison on Italy.
 15. To look on. To respect; to regard; to esteem; to consider; to view; to think on.

 LOOK, n. f. [This word, which is now used only in Scotland, is the English word loon.] A forry fellow; a scoundrel; a rascal.
 Thou cream-fac'd loon!
 Where got'st thou that goose look?
 The false loon, who could not work his will
 By open force, employ'd his flat'ring skill:
 I hope, my lord, said he, I not offend;
 Are you afraid of me that are your friend?
 This young lord had an old cunning rogue, or, as the Scots call it, a false loon of a grandfather, that one might call a Jack of all trades. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
 LOOP, n. f. [from loopen, Dutch, to run.] A double through which a string or lace is drawn; an ornamental double or fringe.
 Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine,
 Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
 With this, so curious network, to compare. Spenser.
 Make me to see't, or at least so prove it,

That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
 To hang a doubt on. Shakef. As You Like It.
 Bind our crooked legs in hoops
 Made of shells, with silver loops. Benj. Johnson.
 An old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his cloaths with great integrity, while all the rest of the world are degenerated into buttons, pockets, and loops. Addison.
 LOOPED, adj. [from loop.] Full of holes.
 Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
 That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
 How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
 Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
 From seasons such as these? Shakef. King Lear.
 LOOPHOLE, n. f. [from loop and hole.]

 This uneasy loophol'd gaol,
 In which y' are hamper'd by the felloek,
 Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock. Hudibras, p. ii.
 LOORD, n. f. [from loerd, Dutch; from lurdant, French; lurdant, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Treux derives lurdant from lorde or lourde, a village in Gascoigne, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gascoigne is so far removed, that, at this day, they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but then it is used in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness. Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord; and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e. lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortune'd a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw the Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death: but being afterward expelled, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppressed, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartan ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dulness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean.] A drone.
 Siker, thou'st but a lazy loord,
 And rekes much of thy fwinke,
 That with fond terms and witless words
 To bleer mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Pastorals.
 TO LOOSE, v. a. [from loose, Saxon.]
